OPINION

ROSENTHAL, District Judge:

Appellants Jane Doe and Charles Boone sued the Wilmington Housing Authority (WHA), challenging parts of its revised firearms policy under the Second Amendment of the United States Constitution and Article I, Section 20 of the Delaware Constitution. The United States District Court for the District of Delaware held that the Common Area Provision (paragraph 3) and the Reasonable Cause Provision (paragraph 4) of the revised policy did not offend either the Second Amendment or Article I, Section 20. Doe v. Wilmington Hous. Auth., 880 F. Supp. 2d 513, 536–39 (D. Del. 2012). Appellants did not appeal the Second Amendment ruling but did appeal the ruling on the Delaware Constitution.¹

Because the appeal raised unresolved questions of Delaware constitutional law, on July 18, 2013, we asked the Delaware Supreme Court to accept certification under Article IV, Section 11(8) of the Delaware Constitution and Delaware Supreme Court Rule 41 to answer the following questions:

- (1) Whether, under Article I, § 20 of the Delaware Constitution, a public housing agency such as the WHA may adopt a policy prohibiting its residents, household members, and guests from displaying or carrying a firearm or other weapon in a common area, except when the firearm or other weapon is being transported to or from a resident's housing unit or is being used in self-defense.

- (2) Whether, under Article I, § 20 of the Delaware Constitution, a public housing agency such as the WHA may require its residents, household members, and guests to have available for inspection a copy of any permit, license, or other documentation required by state, local, or federal law for the ownership, possession, or transportation of any firearm or other weapon, including a license to carry a concealed weapon, as required by 11 Del. C. § 1441, on request, when there is reasonable cause to believe that the law or policies have been violated.

On July 30, 2013, the Delaware Supreme Court accepted certification of these questions. After considering the parties' briefs and arguments, on March 18, 2014, the Court issued an opinion answering both questions in the negative. Doe v. Wilmington Hous. Auth., 88 A.3d 654 (Del. 2014).

The Delaware Supreme Court held that the interpretation of Article I, Section 20 did not depend on the Second Amendment; that, under Delaware law, the right to bear arms was not absolute; and that an intermediate-scrutiny analysis applied, allowing a court "to consider public safety and other important governmental interests." Id. at 667. Applying intermediate scrutiny, the Delaware Supreme Court held that the Common Area Provision "burden[ed] the right to bear arms more than is reasonably necessary" and that the Reasonable Cause Provision that enforced the Common Area Provision was also overbroad. Id. at 668–69. As a result, these provisions were unconstitutional under Article I, Section 20. Id. at 670.

We adopt the Delaware Supreme Court's opinion in Doe v. Wilmington Hous. Auth., 88 A.3d 654 (Del. 2014). We will reverse and remand the District Court's judgment under the Delaware Constitution for entry of judgment consistent with the guidance that the Delaware Supreme Court has provided.
